Story of A Dollar

Ten years ago a farmer put his initials on a dollar, and went to town and spent it. Before the year was out he got the dollar back. Four times in six years the dollar came back to him and three times he heard of it in the pockets of his neighbors. The last time he got it four years ago he sent it to a mail order house. He has not seen that dollar since and he never will. That dollar will never pay any more road or school tax for him, will never build up or brighten the homes of the community. He sent it entirely out of the circle of usefulness to himself. —Roff Eagle.

TWO MEN INDICTED FOR THEFT OF CREEK ROLLS

Muskogee, Oct. 13.—W. T. Martin, Jr., a former employee of the Dawes commission, and M. F. Dunleavy, a prominent real estate man, were indicted yesterday by the federal grand jury here charged with the theft, over a year ago, of the Creek Indian rolls. They were arrested and released on bonds of $1,000 each.

The maximum penalty is a fine of $2000 or imprisonment for 3 years at hard labor.

The rolls were stolen from the government offices. The present law, which was introduced by Representative Murphy of Missouri, at the last session of congress, makes it a felony to have in one's possession a copy of any Indian roll.

The Indian rolls contain the names of every Indian man, woman and child owning property in the territory, and give the location of such land. This information would be most valuable in aiding prospective buyers to secure choice pieces of land as soon as the government would permit the Indians to dispose of it.

ATTRACTING ATTENTION

ement Plant Listed Among Territory's Big Enterprises.

An article from Muskogee contains a summary of the important new enterprises contributing to the current development of the southwest.

It includes the following complimentary paragraph about our big cement plant; though some of the statement is inaccurate, it indicates the attention paid to the establishment of the plant:

"One of the most important of the new manufacturing industries is the cement plant at Ada which is now being built by parties from Huntington, Ind. It will have a capacity of 1000 barrels per day and will employ 300 men. In order to secure this plant the town of Ada raised $25,000 as a bonus and agreed to make an artificial lake covering fifty acres to furnish the water. A. L. Beck is president of the new company."

VOTERS MUST ALSO RESIDE 30 DAYS IN PRECINCT

Muskogee, Oct. 13.—The districting and canvassing board of Indian territory, composed of Tams Bixby, Judges Joseph A. Gill and W. H. Clayton, met in this city Thursday with Charles H. Wilson secretary of Oklahoma and member of the Oklahoma election board.

A slight change in the election laws was made, bringing about uniformity of the election laws of the two territories. The following statement in the form of a resolution was passed and made public:

As to electors: Inasmuch as the election officials in Oklahoma have constructed the law to require a thirty days' residence in a precinct in order to entitle an elector to vote, and have also applied such construction of the law to govern the election in the Osage Nation; and this Board believing that it is within its powers to define how the six months' residence required of an elector shall be proven, has determined to change its rule heretofore published in its compendium, in order that the rules for the election in the two territories may be uniform.

Therefore be it
Resolved by the Board that Rule 18 concerning elections be, and the same is hereby changed to read as follows:

18.—Electors.
All male persons over the age of twenty-one years who are citizens of the United States or who are members of any Indian nation or tribe in the Indian territory, and who have resided within the limits of the proposed state of Oklahoma for at least six months and within the territory embraced by the boundaries of the precinct in which they offer to vote for a period of thirty days next preceding the election, are hereby authorized to vote for and choose delegates to form a constitutional convention for said proposed state; and all persons qualified to vote for said delegates shall be eligible to serve as delegates. Each elector shall vote by ballot in the precinct where he resides.

At The Opera House

"A Prince of His Race" will be the initial offering of the Barrie Stock Co. which opens a weeks engagement and Saturday matinee Monday Oct. 15th. During the engagement they will present "At Sunrise Hollow," "A Broken Heart," "Down Where the cotton Blossoms Grow" and others of merit. Special scenery is carried for each production and the specialties are the best that money can secure. Mr. Barrie's motto is, your money back if you are not satisfied. Ladies free Monday night, usual conditions.

TO COMMEMORATE INDIAN BATTLE BY MONUMENT

Lawton, Okla., Oct. 13.—Tah-ay-bo, an educated member of the Kiowa tribe of Indians who was shopping in this city today, stated that it is proposed by the chiefs, sub-chiefs and others of the Kiowa, Comanche, Apache, Caddo and Wichita tribes that a monument of commemoration of the famous battle of the Wichitas between the Indians and the whites be constructed of granite obtained from the Wichita mountains at some convenient spot on the old battlefield.

The battle of the Wichitas was fought in the early part of September, 1858. The United States forces were commanded by Major Van Dorn of dashing cavalry fame and they were accompanied by the Ross Texas Brigade in command of General L. S. Ross. Ross had with him a body of Indian scouts known as the Red Warriors, who did excellent service. The scouts discovered a large Comanche village near the Wichita mountains and made report to the officers in command, who were in camp ninety miles away from the Comanche camp.

Four companies of men set out in the early morning after the scouts had reported and after hard marching for thirty-six hours arrived in the vicinity of the Comanche camp. Five hundred Comanche horses were rounded up by the Americans while the Comanches still slept and when they awoke they were compelled to resist the American attack on foot. The battle lasted all day and both Van Dorn and Ross were wounded. The Americans lost five killed and several wounded while the Comanches had ninety killed, many wounded and several captured.

It was during this battle that General Ross captured a little white girl of unknown parentage whom the Indians had captured. She has since been known in history as Lizzie Ross.

McCURTAIN ROASTS HITCHCOCK

In Last Message to Legislature Lambasts Hitchcockism.

Tuskahoma, I. T., Oct. 13.—Governor Green McCurtain, chief of the Choctaw nation, in his last message to the last tribal legislature now in session here, says:—

"We are virtually denied the right to any choice in the settlement of our estate. The interior department has acted with much severity toward the Choctaw people. We can no longer regard the present secretary as a friend. He has in an arbitrary way usurped authority that does not and never did belong to his office. The most recent and flagrant act of usurpation of authority is the denial of the right of the national treasurer to pay the national warrants issued for legitimate expenses of the Choctaw government in payment of salaries of officers for services rendered."

"Under the arbitrary ruling of the department our courts have been completely suspended on account of lack of funds. Many criminals that were under arrest cannot be tried because the courts have no funds to pay witnesses who must be summoned to testify in criminal proceedings. The net result is that this class of criminals has been turned loose in our midst to again prey upon society.

"I think it desirable that you should bring your deliberations to a speedy conclusion. Congress has seen fit to limit the sessions of council to thirty days. It may be best and I suggest the wisdom of adjourning as soon as possible in order that we may preserve as much time after the convention of congress to the end that we may more thoroughly protect our interests after the meeting of that body."

The Barrie Stock Co. of 14 people which will commence a weeks engagement at the opera house next Monday night, comes highly recommended. This is the company that was selected to play the first state fair at the Hinton theatre in Muskogee. Remember all next week and ladies free first night. Prices 25-35 and 50.

MISREPRESENTING THE UNION

In some mysterious way it has got noised over the territory that J. J. Burton, instead of being made the regular nominee of the republican party in this district, was formally nominated by the Farmers Union organization last Tuesday. In various out of town papers the news item bears such a tone as intimates he was nominated by the Union and merely indorsed by the republicans.

Now how could the facts have got thus distorted? To whose interests could such a distortion redound? Evidently that's the very political condition republicans would wish for—to have the Farmer's Union consider Mr. Burton their own candidate until after election when he would become a full fledged republican delegate. The trick looks like a typical piece of republican chicanery. It deserves the cordial contempt of every democratic farmer in this district.

The Farmers' Union of this section has not perverted its organization into a political party, neither has it yet prostituted its lofty purposes to forwarding the selfish designs of the republican party.

If the Union should ever conclude to make of itself a political party, or to make of itself a republican side show, in all probability it will come out openly and announce the fact to the world. In the meantime it is a rank insult to the Union for republican schemers to encourage the false impression aforesaid.

As an illustration of what is alleged in the foregoing, note the following from the Ardmoreite based on advises that paper received from Ada:

"A telephone special from Ada to the Ardmoreite stated that the Farmers Union of the 37th district had nominated J. J. Burton for delegate to the constitutional convention. Mr. Burton lives in Ada and it is said that he is a republican.

It would be in harmony with political tactics to assume that Mr. Burton will be endorsed by republicans and a desperate effort be made to line up the farmers vote with the republican vote.

"The democrats have nominated Carlton Weaver in that district. He is brilliant, young active and possesses the power to hold the democratic vote in line.

The republican effort to fuse with the farmers will prove a miserable failure. The farmer is attached to his union but he cannot be gulled into changing his politics merely because a few leaders of the union put a republican in the field as a Farmers' Union nominee."

The democratic farmers of the 37th district have helped to nominate a good candidate, one who will faithfully represent their interest in the constitutional convention as well as every other legitimate interest in this section. All the farmer wants in government is all the democratic party wants, viz, a fair and equal chance for every honest man, whatever his avocation.

The democrats have chosen as their nominee a man who has the sense and integrity to work for that ideal of government.

No reasonable farmer would want the convention to be composed entirely of farmers. Farmers realize that it will be best for that body to represent a variety of pursuits—just so the pursuits are legitimate and the representatives are honest. Of course our farming interests are of basic importance and no candidate is worthy of an honest voter's support who is not in profound sympathy with the farmers cause.

Most assuredly there should be and there will be some farmers in that constitutional convention—a number of them. Already the democratic party in a number of districts in the two territories has nominated good farmers for delegates and the party is bending every energy toward the election of those farmers. There is every indication that the democrats will have a splendid majority in the convention, and in that democratic majority there will be some splendid representatives of the farming class who will take a conspicuous part in framing Oklahoma's constitution. It will be a democratic document, a farmers' document, framed by farmers and friends of farmers.

Carlton Weaver will be one of those friends of the farmers.

REPUBLICANS expect the Fairbanks tours of the territories to counteract the effect of Bryan's memorable tour a few days ago. But hardly.

THOMAS JEFFERSON HOXTON of Hickory is the republican nominee for delegate over in the Sulphur district while Ben Harrison is the democratic nominee in the 88th. For fear some voters in each district might get the politics of the candidates confused it might be well for these two nominees to swap names.

THE Muskogee Phoenix observes that "Ada is lying awake at night thinking over numerous railroad propositions." It should understand Ada's dreams are not occupied solely with railroad projects. Ada is right now more absorbed in abundant water and factories—some things so tempting that they would make Muskogee's mouth water.

Lamb in the Lion's Mouth.

Rio Janeiro, Oct. 13.—Viscount Almeida, a well known member of society, committed suicide in a novel manner. He invited a number of friends to dinner and afterwards led them to a cage of lions that he had hired from a local menagerie. When all were watching the animals and chatting the viscount opened the door of the cage and entered. The lions pounced upon him and he was fatally mutilated before he could be dragged out. It is said he was overwhelmed with gambling debts.

CIRCUS COME AND GONE

Night Performance Not Up To The Standard

The Forepaugh-Sells Bros circus came, gathered in the shekels and has gone—to Muskogee.

Both the attendance and the performance in the afternoon were good. The same cannot be said of the night performance. Of course in the smaller cities the night attendance can never be expected to be enormous; also it is usual to abbreviate somewhat the features of the full performance.

But the entertainment Friday night was particularly brief and particularly bum. The spectacle, "Fighting the Flames," was a distinct disappointment. All the performers as well as the animals, were listless and appeared to need sleep.

The circus should not throw off on the night performance to such a flagrant extent.

OVERDRAFTS

It is becoming well known by business men that overdrafts, whether large or small, are not approved by the controller of the currency. The large central banks allow overdrafts only in a very small way, and this, it matters not how small, is not approved by the powers that be. This unbusinesslike habit of overdrafts grew out of advancing on moving products, such as cotton, grain and fat stock on the move. The overdraft system is wrong and the man whose account is always overdrawn is the man who spends more money than he makes and will finally have no bank account.

HOW STENSLAND WAS CAPTURED

Story of the Pursuit and Apprehension of the President of the Wrecked Milwaukee Avenue State Bank of Chicago.

Run to Earth at Tangier, Morocco, the Man Chiefly Responsible for the Ruin of Thousands of Poor Depositors in His Institution Comes Back to the United States to End His Life in the Penitentiary—Days and Nights of Misery Since His Flight from Chicago.

Chicago.—The story of the pursuit and capture of Paul O. Stensland, president of the wrecked Milwaukee Avenue State bank, is one of the most dramatic in the history of those all too frequent events. Traced from this city to Tangier, Morocco, he was apprehended there by Assistant State's Attorney Olsen, who was accompanied by a representative of the Chicago Tribune. Not less interesting is Stensland's account of the circumstances leading to the wrecking of the bank and the despoiling of thousands of depositors of the poorer class of the savings of their lifetime. Told in detail by the Tribune representative the story is as follows:

It was the old story of a woman scorned that led to the finding of Stensland's trail. One of his numerous friends who thought she had been shabbily treated put the authorities in possession of the first hint as to the fugitive's whereabouts. Her information was indefinite, but investigation proved its probable accuracy.

Finally, on August 13, it became certain that he was in Tangier and had been for 16 days. The facts were laid before State's Attorney Healy. He was asked if he could send a man with a representative of the Tribune to an unknown destination, where it was expected to find Stensland or his trail. Mr. Healy accepted the proposition and Assistant State's Attorney Harry Olson was ordered to meet the representative of the Tribune in New York on Monday, August 20. The next day Mr. Olson and the Tribune man sailed on the liner Kaiser Wilhelm II.

Paris was reached Monday, August 17, and was left Tuesday at noon. Madrid was reached Wednesday after-

As he was riding to the hotel at midnight after getting the governor of the French bank out of bed, a voice from a Moorish cafe sung out:

"I say, Olson, I think I know your governor is."

We dismounted as the hotel man continued:

"You left the old man in 'Gib.' A friend of mine just come over on the night boat says he saw him at the Grand hotel."

When we left Tangier Sunday afternoon, September 2, for Gibraltar to run down the Grand hotel clew we left 25 Moorish and Arab scouts to guard all the entrances and exits.

Less than an hour after the Oldenburg, the German steamer bearing Stensland from the Rock to the Moorish coast, reached port our Arab chief of scouts sent a cable to us at Gibraltar announcing the arrival of the boat and the presence on board of the man we wanted.

Hired Special Steamer.

We began negotiations for a special steamer to bring us back to Tangier. Finally a small steamer was chartered and permission obtained from the officer of the guard to leave port.

At midnight we turned tail on the Rock and headed across the straits. It was four o'clock in the morning when we rounded Malabat Point and saw the red light above the gate of the city of Tangier.

The steamer Oldenburg lay half a mile off shore. We hauled alongside and asked if the passengers had landed. It was great relief to hear that they had not, as we feared that if so Stensland might have been warned and started for the interior. This would not have prevented his capture, but would have delayed it and made lots of trouble.

Stensland Comes Ashore.

Forty minutes later a boat put off from the German steamer and headed for the pier. In the stern sat Stensland, looking fat and hearty. He climbed up the steps to the wharf chatting gayly with four German fellow passengers.

We trailed slowly behind Stensland up the steep, hilly streets. When the British post office in Soko Chico square was reached Stensland entered.

"Any letter for P. Olsen?" he asked.

"No, sir."

bay, and, by a supreme effort retaining control of his voice and features, said:

"No, no, I think not. You cannot take me. I will not go."

"But you will go," he was answered. "Listen. You think this is a protected country. It is not. You made a big mistake. You will be arrested here, thrown into a Moorish prison, then taken aboard a United States warship and shipped in irons to the United States. The question is, do you want to go back as a gentleman or as a felon?"

Prisoner Is Obstinate.

Stensland was obstinate and declared we could not take him and that the moment he left Chicago his ever-waking thought was pregnant with fear and his every sleeping moment filled with terrifying visions.

Stensland's Life in Tangier.

Stensland evidently thought himself absolutely safe from pursuit, or, like the majority of fugitives, became careless as soon as he set foot on foreign soil. The day after his arrival he amazed Proprietor Sterwind by exhibiting, as Sterwind said, "an awful lot of money and a great number of big bills."

When he dumped $12,000 on the counter the eyes of the clerk bulged out, and he called M. Gaurant, the governor, who questioned the prospective he would not go voluntarily.

As a matter of fact, we had no legal right to stop Stensland. Technically we were guilty of kidnapping, and the situation began to look serious. The American minister could not order Stensland's arrest until he had received instructions from Washington. These had been cabled for the night before, but had not arrived. If Stensland had only known this he could have walked out and told us to go to blazes. He could not have escaped ultimately, but he could have caused us lots of trouble.

Just as we were about to take recourse to argument and threats, telling him we would follow him to the end of the earth and capture him eventually, salvation came from Minister Gummere. James Martin, of the American legation staff appeared with a note from the minister saying if I had notified the state department he would take the responsibility of detaining Stensland, pending advices from Washington.

By this time the fugitive banker had wilted and he agreed to return to America with us any way we chose without process.

During the long afternoon in the office of the American consul Stensland talked broken heartedly with us and finally made a full confession to Assistant State's Attorney Olson in my presence.

Puts Blame on Cashier.

He said: "I cannot understand how the shortage can be $2,000,000. To my certain knowledge my liability to the bank does not exceed $500,000. Anything over that must have been stolen by Hering."

"My indebtedness began a long while ago, in 1896. It was a small affair, a small amount, and God knows I never intended to steal. I was in a tight hole and needed money. I put my own note, genuine, not a forgery, in the box. Then it was suggested to me that the bank examiner would stand for it, and he did."

"I never threw away money in any direction in my life. I never spent over $5,000 a year. I always was a worker. I never loafed in my life. I always was the first man at the bank and the last to leave it."

"The money I took was invested, year after year, in an endeavor to make good. Every dollar went into real estate or business."

"They were bad investments and today I am arrested, a fugitive, with the certainty of a prison cell. And I am nearly 60 years old. God! God! God!"

As a matter of fact Stensland failed to take the most simple measures to hide his identity. In his trunk were found four volumes of Ibsen, all with Stensland's full name on the flyleaf. His key ring bore the tag of the Milwaukee Avenue State bank.

The most amazing blunder of all was across the end of his big trunk in white letters three inches high, "Paul O. Stensland."

"I did not notice this," said he "till crossing from Gibraltar. I was leaning over the rail of the upper deck and happened to look down on the main deck and saw my trunk with my full name starting me right in the face. I nearly fainted. I got down as soon as possible and sat on the name for the rest of the voyage."

Stensland's life of exile was hell on earth, according to Stensland. From customer. Stensland, in answer to M. Gaurant's inquiries, said he came from America, and when further questioned as to why he carried money in such shape and had no letter of credit, said he thought he would get the worst of exchange and concluded it was best to carry currency.

Stensland soon became a conspicuous figure in Tangier. The Oriental hotel stands just between the Mosque Dramakebir and the Cafe Francaise. Stensland gave the mosque the cold shoulder, but the Cafe Francaise, the Cafe Imperial, and the Cafe Turquesque found a good customer in him. Every night he climbed the hills and wound his tortuous way through alley-like streets, from one to the other. Mme. Yvette, at the Francaise, was his favorite chanteuse.

Spanish Dancer His Favorite.

But his real favorite was Senorita Vittoria, a Spanish dancer from Seville, who performs with exceptional abandon the fandango at the Cafe Imperial. Her partiality for him aroused a feeling of jealousy in the breast of an Arab chief who enjoyed the smiles of the danseuse until Stensland appeared on the scene.

On Friday, September 6, instructions from the state department at Washington were received by Minister Gummere to surrender Stensland to the custody of "James Keeley and Harry Olson as the officially appointed agents of the United States." We gave a formal receipt for the prisoner, Stensland himself signing it as a witness to our signatures.

The first step after receiving the prisoner was to arrange for safeguarding him. Accompanied by an attaché of the United States consular office, we at once rode to the Kasbah, which is the joint Moorish prison and administrative building. The basha, Sid Cador Belghasi, was found sitting in the mezzanine, or "salon of complaints," where he receives those who are wronged and want stern and instantaneous Moorish justice.

Through an interpreter we informed the basha that Stensland had been turned over to us and that we wished to make arrangements for properly safeguarding him until the time of our departure.

The basha expressed great appreciation of the honor done him in asking his aid and said that a cell in the prison was at our immediate disposal, at the same time calling an officer of the guard to show it to us.

Declined Offer of Cell.

The cell was extremely uninviting, and we had heard horrible stories of what had taken place behind the ramparts of the Kasbah. We decided it would be neither humane nor politic to confine Stensland there, as Assistant State's Attorney Olson wanted to bring home a live man, not a corpse.

Arrangements finally were made for a guard of six soldiers under the absolute orders of ourselves. Two were to be placed on the roof, two at the only door, and two inside. The prisoner was moved to his new quarters at once, there to remain until arrangements for transporting him to the United States had been made.

September 13 Stensland and his captors left Tangier for New York on a German liner which had called at the port by request of the state authorities at Washington.

RELATION OF THE SILO AND SILAGE TO DAIRYING

Development of This Method of Keeping Green Fodder Has Made Winter Dairying Profitable.

Twenty years ago few farmers knew what a silo was, and fewer still had ever seen one or fed ensilage to their stock. It would probably have been necessary at that time to publish a book describing the silo system, with definitions of silo and ensilage. Now all farmers who read agricultural papers, or who attend agricultural conventions or agricultural colleges, are at least familiar with the fact that a silo is an air tight structure used for the preservation of coarse fodder in succulent condition, and that silage is the feed taken out, even though they have not had a chance to become familiar with the appearance and properties of the latter.

It was not until the latter part of the '70's that the building of silos intended for the manufacture of ensilage silage on the digestive system and general health of the animal is very beneficial. It is a mild laxative and acts in this way very similar to green fodder.

The filling of silos is the all-important problem at the present time. As has previously been stated, corn is one of the best feeds for making silage. Corn should be left in the field before cutting until it has passed through the doughy state, that is until the kernels are well dented and glazed, as in the case of flint varieties.

The cutting of corn for the silo is usually done on small farms by hand. Many farmers have been using self-raking and corn-binding harvesters for this purpose, while others report good success with a sled or platform cutter. If the corn stands up well and is not of a very large variety, the end sought may be reached in a very satisfactory manner by either of these methods. If, on the other hand, much of the corn is down, hand cutting is to be preferred.

A number of different makes of corn harvesters and corn cutters are now on the market, and it is very likely that hand cutting for fodder will be done away with in the years to come, at least on large farms.

After the corn is cut, a low rack, with wagon, is very essential for hauling the corn, for corn in the green state is extremely heavy and requires much energy to load the same on high wagons. The corn having been hauled from the field to the silo has still to be reduced to a fine, homogeneous mass, convenient for feeding and economical as far as the utilization of the silage for feed is concerned. In order to do this the whole of the corn, ears and all, may be run through the ensilage cutter.

The corn is unloaded on a table and run through the cutter, after which it is carried through a tube by means of a blast of air, up into the silo window, and is delivered into the middle of the silo.

If corn is siloed ears and all, it is necessary to keep a man or boy in the silo while it is being filled to level the surface and tramp down the sides and corners. If left by itself the heavier pieces of corn will be thrown each way and the light leaves and tops will come closest to the discharge, and as a result the corn will not settle evenly and the different layers of ensilage will have a different feeding value.

After the filling process, the materials should be leveled off, and the common and most successful practice is to keep the material higher at the sides than in the center, and do all the tramping at, and close to, the sides, where the friction of the wall tends to prevent as rapid settling as takes place in the center. For this reason, in the modern deep silo, no tramping, or at least as little as possible, should be done except close to the walls. The weight of silage accomplishes more than any amount of tramping, and all that is necessary is to see that the silage is evenly distributed and to assist in settling by some tramping at the sides.

After the silo is filled the silage is left to settle. In the course of several weeks a layer at the top, approximately a foot deep, will begin to de-began in this country. To-day silos are very common in the east, especially in the great dairy district of the Mohawk valley, in New York, the western reserve of Ohio, and the Elgin district of northern Illinois and southern Wisconsin, in the latter state being as common as barns.

In 1888 the United States department of agriculture could find only 91 farmers in this whole country who used silos. The feeding of silage is now considered a necessity on thousands of dairy farms in the United States and it is a noticeable fact that the states and localities ranking first in dairy importance are the ones in which the most silos are found. It is likely that if a census were taken of the number of silos in use in this country to-day, we would find between 400,000 and 500,000.

The siloing of feed compares favorably with the canning of fruits and vegetables. There are various feeds that can be siloed, but it has been definitely determined that Indian corn is best adapted for this purpose. However, alfalfa and cow-peas, or soybeans, are being siloed at the present time with great success. A mixture of alfalfa and corn, or soybeans and corn, is preferable to either of these siloed alone, on account of the balanced nutriment which these feeds contain.

The advantages of silos, as enumerated by John R. Fitch in Prairie Farmer, are numerous. The silo enables the farmer to preserve a larger quantity of the food material of the original fodder for the feeding the farm animals than is possible by any other system of preservation now known.

Summarizing the considerations concerning the relative losses of food material, as given by the various stations, in field-curing and siloing of Indian corn, we may say that the latter, under favorable conditions, is far more economical than the former, and therefore a larger quantity of food materials is obtained by filling the silo with fodder corn, than by any other method of preservation known at the present time. Besides this comes the great problem of succulency.

All feeds of a succulent nature are more digestible and more palatable than dry feeds. We all know the difference between a juicy ripe apple, and dry fruit. In the drying of fruits, as well as in the drying of corn fodder, water is the main component taken away. This causes a loss of certain flavoring materials, which, though they do not vary much in the chemist's balance, are of the greatest importance in rendering food materials palatable.

It is the same food materials which are washed out of the hay during heavy rains, and renders such hay of no value, often of no more value than so much straw—not because it does not contain nearly as much food substance, like protein, fat, starch and sugar, but because of the substances that render hay palatable having been removed by the rain.

The influence of well preserved may and mould and seal the rest from further decomposition. When feeding time comes this top layer is removed to a depth sufficient to reach pure silage. The silage in a silo is always more or less heated on account of the fermentative process, hence the top layer, which is cooled from one feed to another, should be raked off evenly and then fed.

Silage, the same as canned products, should not be exposed to air for too long a time, for decomposition takes place very rapidly.

The principal lesson to be learned from experiments is that the farmer who would produce milk cheaply should have alfalfa or clover hay and a silo. A combination of silage and alfalfa hay make the cheapest milk producing ration available. The addition of grain will increase the milk flow to some extent, especially in the first few months of the lactation period. Later in the period the need for grain decreases, and from the standpoint of most economical production very little grain is needed if alfalfa roughage is provided for feeding.

noon, August 29, and Gibraltar 26 hours later. On Saturday morning, September 1, the boat was taken for Tangier, the Moorish city being reached early in the evening.

Back to Gibraltar.

All Saturday night and until four o'clock Sunday afternoon, September 2, the investigation proceeded. At every town Stensland's tracks were uncovered and the last clew pointed to the Grand hotel at Gibraltar. It was as follows: Assistant State's Attorney Olson had represented himself to the keeper of the hotel where Stensland stopped at Tangier as his son. Stensland, as has been stated, is traveling under the alias of P. Olsen. The names were the same and the two men do not look unlike. The hotel keeper believed the story, but could give no direct information as to Stensland's whereabouts.
